

PHOTOWALK

Majnu ka Tila, New Delhi

9 April 2018

Brief Report

Team Photobug organized a photowalk at Majnu ka Tila, Delhi on 9 April 2018 for its members. Majnu ka Tila is also called as Little Tibet and is one of Delhi's famous food destination.

The Mkt colony, as it is famously called was established around 1950 and was allotted by the Government of India to the Tibetan refugees in 1960. Today, it is home to second generation of Tibet refugees and is also known as Samyeling. Mkt has a number of hotels, guest houses and restaurants. The place has a relatively large population as is evident by cramped up closely built houses, several floors high and approachable through narrow bylanes. In addition, there is a market of retail stalls, including bookshops, curio shops, metalsmiths, and a beauty parlor; internet cafes, and travel agencies. The neighborhood is extremely popular among foreign and domestic tourists. Majnu-ta-killahouses a monastery and Buddhist temple, preaching Tibetan Buddhism. Thus the place looks like a canvas painted with the vivid colours that never fail to catch the eye and provides an ideal location for street photography.

Photobug members gathered at Majnu ka Tila at 9:00 am. Led by the Tanya Dasgupta, President of society, the members walked through the lanes of Mkt, experiencing the ambience of the place. They captured various facets of street photography, tried different framing and compositions and tried to capture images from various perspectives. Many interesting photos, showcasing the culture and daily routine of the place were clicked. It was a fun photowalk which was enjoyed by one and all. The members left for their homes by around 1:00 pm
