

PHOTOWALK

Red Fort and Chandni Chowk

4 February 2017

Brief Report

Photobug members planned a photowalk to Red fort and Chandni Chowk on February 4, 2017, a place that represents the amalgamation of medieval and modern Delhi. Twelve members of the society participated in the photowalk. The members gathered at Chandni Chowk metro station at around 8:00 am. After that, we all walked through the lanes to reach Red Fort.

The Red fort complex is part of Shahjahanabad, the capital of fifth Mughal emperor of India, Shah Jahan. The fort and palace represents the zenith of Mughal creativity, and is a favourite destination for heritage photography. After spending time in the Red fort, we roamed around in the busy roads and lanes of Chandni Chowk to capture some street photography shots. The photowalk not only provided an ideal opportunity to capture some lovely pics, but also provided a platform for seniors and juniors to interact and learn from each other.
